Springer announces new Series Editors
David Gillen and Werner Rothengatter to helm the Transportation Research, Economics and Policy book series

Series Description
The objective of the series is to provide academics, students, policy analysts and practitioners with authoritative and accessible information to develop practical solutions, assist in policy formulation and inform debate on transportation issues and questions.

Topics in the series may include:
- transportation economics
- management of transportation by firms
- government bodies and regulators and the integration of transportation into cities, regions and countries

The unifying feature of each volume is the development or application of quantitative economic models and methods to examine current and emerging issues relating to transportation. Coverage includes the analysis of data, models of market structure, the evolution of institutions and emerging governance structures all in the context of transportation economics, policy and management. Both research monographs and edited volumes will be considered for publication in the series.

About the Series Editors
Dr. Gillen holds the Vancouver International Airport Professorship of Transportation Policy and Management in the Sauder School of Business and is Director of the Centre for Transportation Studies, University of British Columbia. He has published on a variety of topics in transportation economics and management. He is Associate Editor of Transportation Research E and is on the Editorial Board of the Journal of Transport Economics and Policy.

Dr. Rothengatter has been head of the Institute of Economic Policy Research and the Unit of Transport and Communication at the University of Karlsruhe since 1990. He has published six books and more than one hundred articles in the field of transport economics and management. He was president of the World Conference on Transport Research Society from 2001 to 2007 and sits on the editorial advisory boards of several leading journals in the field.
