Competing Financial Interests Policy for the journal Metabolomics

Please note that this policy applies only to journal Metabolomics.

MEBO’s Competing Financial Interests Policy
MEBO requires the authors of articles to disclose competing financial interests in the body of the manuscript. The corresponding author will also complete and sign a form and return to the journal office. This form will declare if any of the authors have competing financial interests and if so, the nature of these competing interests. This form is also available online.

Definition
The competing financial interest’s policy for MEBO is in place to uphold the objectivity and value of the articles, strive toward the highest standards in the peer review process, and champion clear boundaries in all relationships between sponsors and advertisers.

We, like other journals, have defined competing financial interests to include the following:

Funding: Research support (including salaries, equipment, supplies, reimbursement for attending symposia, and other expenses)

Employment: While engaged in the research project.

Personal financial interests: This may include stocks or shares in companies that may gain or lose financially through publication; consulting fees from organizations that may gain or lose financially through publication; patents or patent applications whose value may be affected by publication.

Application to Authors
We recognize that in some instances, confidentiality agreements may challenge this disclosure policy. In such cases the authors are asked to contact the Springer office or the editors directly.

Authors are not required to state the monetary value of their interests.

Application to Reviewers
MEBO encourages reviewers to decline offers to review an article if there is any perceived conflict of interest.

Application to editors
MEBO editorial staff and board members will disclose all competing interests that might influence, or be perceived to influence, their editorial practices. Failure to do will result in removal from the board.

Application to publishing policy
Editorial policy decisions made by MEBO or any specific arrangements with advertising clients or sponsors are subject to full competing interest and financial disclosure where there is any risk of a perception of compromise.
