▶ One of the world’s leading publications, covering the field of pediatrics in all its aspects
▶ Internationally recognized for making important developments in pediatrics available to a broad public readership
▶ Fast dissemination of new research due to rapid publication

The European Journal of Pediatrics is one of the world’s leading publications, covering the field of Pediatrics in all its aspects. It was founded in 1910 by H. Finkelstein, L. Langstein, M. v. Pfaundler, C. v. Pirquet, and B. Salge as the Zeitschrift für Kinderheilkunde.

Since then, the Journal has been internationally recognized for making important developments in Pediatrics available to a broad public readership by applying a swift and fair reviewing system.

Its short publication times demonstrate the commitment of the editors and the publisher to speedy publication of new developments in Pediatrics.

The editors encourage authors to submit reviews, original articles, short communications, and correspondence from the following subject areas: cardiology, dermatology, endocrinology, gastroenterology, growth and development, hematology and oncology, immunology and allergology, infectious diseases, intensive care medicine, medical genetics and metabolic diseases, neonatology, nephrology and urology, neuropediatrics, nutrition, pneumology, preventive pediatrics and epidemiology, and psychology.

Impact Factor: 1.921 (2016), Journal Citation Reports®
