INTRODUCTION

1.1. Why the ontology of time?
1.2. The method
1.3. The aim
1.4. “Non-being and time”
1.5. Time as number and calculating soul
1.6. Ontology of human action
1.7. Distinctio et compositio essentiae et existentiae
1.8. The transition to the “synchronic” analysis
1.9. Searching for the lost subject
1.10. Care as primordial temporality
1.11. Differentia differens
1.12. God without being and thought without thinker
1.13. Acknowledgments

CHAPTER ONE
NON-BEING AND TIME
(The prehistory of the concept of time)

1. The circle and the sphere
2. Ontology and chronology

CHAPTER TWO
TIME AS NUMBER AND CALCULATING SOUL
(Aristotle's theory of time. The prototype of the ontological difference)

1. Energeia and its internal form
   1.1. The definition of movement
   1.2. The concept of energeia
   1.3. Sensations as energeial
   1.4. Internal form of energeia
   1.5. Identity of energeia and form
TABLE OF CONTENTS

2. Number as "articulation" of a finite set
   2.1. Magnitude and number 53
   2.2. Number as numbering and as numbered 54
   2.3. The numbering soul 56
3. Being and entity
   3.1. Aristotle on the manifold meanings of being 59
   3.2. The being of the copula 62
4. The "now" as one and as a multiple 66
5. Time and the intellect of the soul
   5.1. Movement and number as objects of the sensus communitis 72
   5.2. How the understanding of difference is possible 73
   5.3. The "now" and the "point" 75
   5.4. Two energeiai of thought 76

CHAPTER THREE
DISTINCTIO ET COMPOSITIO ESSENTIAE ET EXISTENTIAE
AS INTERPRETED BY MARTIN HEIDEGGER

1. Medieval discussion of the ontological difference 78
   1.1. Medieval ontology and The Basic Problems of Phenomenology 78
   1.2. Essence, existence and ontological difference 79
   1.3. Semantic distinctions 80
   1.4. Essence, whatness, nature 82
   1.5. Essence is different from being (existence) 83
   1.6. The simple and the complex 85
   1.7. Distinction as such 85
   1.8. Suarez on the distinction and composition of essence and existence in the finite entity
       1.8.1. Distinctio rationis... 86
       1.8.2. ...cum fundamento in re 88

2. Existence as finite being 90
   2.1. Phenomenological interpretation 90
       2.1.1. Ontology as phenomenology 90
       2.1.2. The ontology of creation 91
   2.2. Being received and not received 94
       2.2.1. Objection to a purely mental character of the ontological distinction 94
       2.2.2. Suarez' answer to this objection 94
   2.3. Received in something other and received from something other 95
   2.4. Existence as the finite being (esse) of finite entities 96
   2.5. Existentia and Existentz 97

CHAPTER FOUR
ONTOLOGY OF HUMAN ACTION
(Aristotle's Eth. Nic. VI and Heidegger's commentaries)

1.1. The topography of the truth. How the soul "discloses the truth" 101
1.2. Quarrel of wisdom and prudence 102
1.3. "Parts" of the soul and their virtues 103
   1.3.1. The soul as the first entelecheia 103
   1.3.2. Corporeality and responsible act 104

CHAPTER FIVE

GOD WITHOUT BEING AND THOUGHT WITHOUT THINKER

1. The source of being which "is not" (On the Divine Names V 5) 120
   1.1. What never was nor will be; what is not 120
   1.2. On the poetic way of naming 123
   1.3. Naming by analogy 125
   1.4. To see the invisible 128
   1.5. Energetia and essence 131
   1.6. Analogia mentis 133
   1.7. Maximus the Confessor on the two parts of the human soul 137

2. The paradoxes of reflection in Husserl’s phenomenology (The transcendental subject lost) 139
   2.1. Da-sein and Bewußt-sein 140
   2.2. Empty and filled 144
   2.3. The ego pursuing itself 150

CHAPTER SIX

SEARCHING FOR THE LOST SUBJECT

1. The genealogy of subjectivity 157
   1.1. Predecessors and heirs of the transcendental subject 157
   1.2. Negative analogy 159
   1.3. Categories and existentialia 160
   1.4. Συγκεκαμάραι and subjectum 162
   1.5. The subject and the ego 164
      1.5.1. The fundamental axiom of classical ontology. Existence and positivity 165
      1.5.2. Man assumes the role of subject 166
   1.6. The category as the internal structure of existence 167
   1.7. Whateness and whoness 168
      1.7.1. Category as a determination of the transcendental subject 168
      1.7.2. The limits of analogy 169

2. Care as the successor of subjectivity (Ontology of being-ready-to-hand) 171
   2.1. Being as "having-to-be" 171
   2.2. The existential structure of care 172
   2.3. Entity-within-the-world and its being 173
   2.4. The sphere of equipment 174
      2.4.1. The totality of involvement 176
      2.4.2. For-the-sake-of-which and for-whose-sake 178
      2.4.3. The ontological concept of care 178

3. The unity of the thing and the unity of care 180
   3.1. Negative analogy as a distinction 180
   3.2. Entity as "one" 180
TABLE OF CONTENTS

3.2.1. Aristotle: the “one” as essence 181
3.3. The unity of the ready-to-hand as a topological unity 182
3.3.1. The tool as “one” 182
3.3.2. Interpretation and freeing of the thing 183
3.4. The topos of Da 184

CHAPTER SEVEN
PRIMORDIAL TEMPORALITY AND ONTOLOGICAL DIFFERENCE

1. Care as primordial temporality 186
   1.1. Being-ready-to-hand and the time of dealing 186
   1.2. “Tendency” before the cogito 187
   1.2. Understanding, interpretation and the meaning of meaning 189
   1.3.1. The meaning of care 190
   1.4. The ecstases of temporality 192
   1.4.1. The forthcoming 192
   1.4.2. The past 192
   1.4.3. The present as the “twinkling of an eye” 193
   1.5. Ecstatic tripartite unity of time and topological unity of Dasein 194
   1.5.1. The point of the “now” and the unity of the transcendental subject 195
   1.5.2. Involvement and the horizon of an object 196
   1.6. Understanding of being and transcendence of Dasein 197
   1.7. The concept of schematism 199
   1.7.1. Directional sense and horizontal schema 199
   1.7.2. Kant’s transcendental schema 200
   1.7.3. Schematism of temporal ecstases and the unity of horizontal schemata 201

2. The ontological difference 203
   2.1. Two forms of ontological difference 203
   2.2. The ready-to-hand, the present-at-hand and the existential ontological modification 206
   2.3. Being-what and being-how of the ready-to-hand 207
   2.4. Praesens as the horizon of the present 208
       2.4.1. Praesens as being-ready-to-hand 209
       2.4.2. Praesens in the “twinkling of an eye” 210
   2.5. Being-what (essence) and being-how (existence) of the present-at-hand 210
   2.6. Absolute temporal flow and primordial temporality 212
   2.7. Possibility of all that which is possible 217
   2.8. Differentia differens 218
