

Preface

This work is based on my doctoral thesis, which was accepted at Humboldt-University Berlin in 2014. It is closely linked to a large-scale research project on ‘Treaties and Subsequent Practice’. This project was funded by the German Research Foundation (DFG) and contributed to a project of the United Nations’ International Law Commission (ILC) on ‘Subsequent Agreements and Subsequent Practice in Relation to Interpretation of Treaties’ led by Special Rapporteur Georg Nolte.

The interrelationship between these projects generated valuable synergies. On the one hand, the thesis informed part of the Special Rapporteur’s final report on the topic. On the other hand, it profited from deep insights into the ILC’s work. Being part of the Special Rapporteur’s research staff, I was fortunate to have had the chance to substantially contribute to various stages of the ILC’s project and to coordinate reports for the earlier ‘Study Group on Treaties over Time’.

An academic work may label one single author. However, it will always be the product of many people: First of all, I wish to thank Professor Georg Nolte for entrusting me with an ambitious and demanding position within the research project on ‘Treaties and Subsequent Practice’ and for having supervised my doctoral thesis. Professor Nolte continuously encouraged me to develop my own thoughts and ideas and to always remain critical towards simplistic truths.

In addition to Professor Gerd Seidel, who gave the second review on my doctoral thesis, I am very grateful to Professor Janbernd Oebbecke and his staff at the University of Muenster. During my undergraduate studies, they set an unparalleled example of cordial, sincere, and sympathetic collegiality, which will inspire me throughout my professional career.

I also gratefully acknowledge the support of the German Academic Scholarship Foundation (Studienstiftung des deutschen Volkes). Its merit doctoral scholarship did not only entail personal space and freedom for finishing my thesis but also offered a stimulating academic environment.

Last but not least, I wish to express my deepest gratitude to my family for having always been there when I needed them, to my friends for never letting me cease laughing and singing during the tougher parts of my academic journey, and to Professor Steffen Hindelang for his selfless academic advice and his unfaltering friendship and support.
