

Our peer review policy:

Each submission is subjected to peer review to assess the validity, quality and originality of the proposed material. This means that

- For projects submitted to a specific series, all proposals are reviewed by the editorial board of the series. In some cases, series editors may request a proposal to be reviewed externally;
- For projects that are outside of the scope of the existing Springer series or for project put together by series editors themselves, all proposals are reviewed by two external peers;
- After the final manuscript has been submitted, it is sent for review to at least two external reviewers who are experts in the field;
- If the manuscript was recommended for publication after revision, the revised version may be sent out for another round of reviews;
- Authors should submit an outline of responses and changes together with the revised manuscript;
- The final decision to accept or reject the manuscript is made by the series editors in conjunction with the publisher (or by Springer's gatekeepers for projects outside of series).

Note that the peer review is single-blind.
