European Journal of Population

Editor-in-Chief: A. Esteve

- ▶ Improves understanding of population phenomena, fostering development of theory and method
- ▶ Spans the boundaries between demography and sociology, anthropology, economics, political science, and health sciences
- ▶ Covers both European and non European countries
- ▶ Benefits researchers, policy makers and others concerned with population processes

The European Journal of Population aims to improve understanding of population phenomena by giving priority to work that contributes to the development of theory and method, and that spans the boundaries between demography and such disciplines as sociology, anthropology, economics, geography, history, political science, epidemiology and other sciences contributing to public health. Contributors come from around the world, and the coverage includes both European and non-European countries.

The journal addresses a broad public of researchers, policy makers and others concerned with population processes and their consequences.

Impact Factor: 1.280 (2017), Journal Citation Reports®
