Steel in Translation

Co-Editor-in-Chief: L.I. Leont'ev; O.N. Soskovets

- ▶ Presents material translated from the two leading Russian ferrous metallurgical journals
- ▶ Reflects the state of iron- and steelmaking in the former Soviet Union
- ▶ Helps assess progress and opportunity in these regions
- ▶ Covers a variety of technical, practical, economic and ecological topics

Steel in Translation is a journal that represents a selection of translated articles from two Russian metallurgical journals: Stal' and Izvestiya Vysshikh Uchebnykh Zavedenii. Chernaya Metallurgiya.

Steel in Translation covers new developments in blast furnaces, steelmaking, rolled products, tubes, and metal manufacturing as well as unconventional methods of metallurgy and conservation of resources. Papers in materials science and relevant commercial applications make up a considerable portion of the journal's contents. There is an emphasis on metal quality and cost effectiveness of metal production and treatment.

PEER REVIEW

The journal represents a selection of translated materials from two Russian ferrous metallurgical journals: Stal' and Izvestiya Vysshikh Uchebnykh Zavedenii. Chernaya Metallurgiya.
