Clinical Proteomics
Editor-in-Chief: D.W. Chan

- Rapid, stringent peer-review- most first editorial decisions are made within 40 days
- Welcomes articles on proteomic technology applications
- Publishes research across the broad spectrum of clinical and translational proteomics

Placing an emphasis on the application of proteomic technology to all aspects of clinical research and molecular medicine, Clinical Proteomics provides a scholarly forum for novel scientific research across the broad spectrum of clinical and translational proteomics. The journal is committed to rapid scientific review, with most initial editorial decisions issued within 40 days of submission, and the timely publication of manuscripts.

Impact Factor: 3.516 (2017), Journal Citation Reports®

Giving authors in their area of expertise the opportunity to publish open access
- High visibility thanks to unrestricted online access
- Rigorous peer-review and high-quality author services
- Creative Commons licensed – authors retain copyright
- Citation tracking and inclusion in bibliographic databases
- Easy compliance with open access mandates