Ambio

A Journal of the Human Environment

Editor-in-Chief: B. Söderström

- ▶ Encourages multi- or interdisciplinary submissions with explicit management or policy recommendations
- ▶ International readership with very wide interests in environmental sciences
- ▶ Broad readership, including not only researchers but also decision-makers and laymen
- ▶ A journal of the Royal Swedish Academy of Sciences
- ▶ Founded in 1972, after the UN conference on the human environment held in Stockholm

Explores the link between anthropogenic activities and the environment, Ambio encourages multi- or interdisciplinary submissions with explicit management or policy recommendations.

Ambio addresses the scientific, social, economic, and cultural factors that influence the condition of the human environment. Ambio particularly encourages multi- or interdisciplinary submissions with explicit management or policy recommendations.

For more than 45 years Ambio has brought international perspective to important developments in environmental research, policy and related activities for an international readership of specialists, generalists, students, decision-makers and interested laymen.

Papers published in Ambio fall into four main categories: Research article, Review, Perspective, Comment. Regardless of article category, your submission should have a clear link between anthropogenic activities and the environment, or vice versa.

Authors are advised to check our latest instructions for authors (see link under "For Authors and Editors" to the right) as these are updated regularly.

Presubmission enquiries welcome, please send an abstract to Editor-in-Chief Bo Söderström. (bo.soderstrom@kva.se)
