Childhood, Science Fiction, and Pedagogy

Children Ex Machina

Series: Children: Global Posthumanist Perspectives and Materialist Theories

- Crosses disciplinary boundaries by drawing on a variety of methodological approaches
- Extends contemporary definitions of science fiction in questions regarding pedagogy and childhood studies
- Calls for a reconsideration of childhood in ways that challenge dominant development and globalization discourses
- Questions conventional approaches to constructions of childhood prevalent in the social and political imaginaries

This book invites readers to both reassess and reconceptualize definitions of childhood and pedagogy by imagining the possibilities - past, present, and future - provided by the aesthetic turn to science fiction. It explores constructions of children, childhood, and pedagogy through the multiple lenses of science fiction as a method of inquiry, and discusses what counts as science fiction and why science fiction counts. The book examines the notion of relationships in a variety of genres and stories; probes affect in the convergence of childhood and science fiction; and focuses on questions of pedagogy and the ways that science fiction can reflect the status quo of schooling theory, practice, and policy as well as offer alternative educative possibilities. Additionally, the volume explores connections between children and childhood studies, pedagogy and posthumanism. The various contributors use science fiction as the frame of reference through which conceptual links between inquiry and narrative, grounded in theories of media studies, can be developed.
