Forced Migration and Resilience

Conceptual Issues and Empirical Results

- Linking perspectives from different scientific disciplines
- Broad focus of resilience analysis on forced migration
- Links between the resilience of the refugees and the resilience in mainly western host societies

This volume includes in a unique way theoretical and empirical contributions on the context of forced migration and resilience from the perspective of psychology and social sciences. Contributions range from analyses of individual vulnerability and exposition to investigations of community and policy reactions in host countries.
