Tunisia as a Revolutionized Space of Migration

- Enriches understanding of how the geographies of mobility are reshaping the Mediterranean
- Offers a detailed case study of the changing patterns of migration across the Mediterranean
- Engages a variety of disciplines such as migration studies, postcolonial studies, political theory and human geography

This book explores the transformation of the Tunisian space of mobility after the Arab Uprisings, looking at the country's emerging profile as a migratory "destination" and focusing on refugees from Syria, Libya, and Sub-Saharan countries; Tunisian migrants in Europe who return home; and young undocumented European migrants living in Tunis. This work engages with and contributes to the broader conversation on the migrations-crisis nexus, by retracing the geographies of mobility which are reshaping the Mediterranean region.
