Latinx Farmworkers in the Eastern United States

Health, Safety, and Justice

- Focuses on health and justice for Latinx farmworkers, an immigrant worker population that is especially vulnerable to the current migration policy actions and debate
- Addresses the issues of health and occupational justice for the special populations of women and child farmworkers, and women and children in farmworker families, including issues of sexual harassment, abuse, and interpersonal violence
- Is relevant for current policy debates on immigration, immigrant workers, and temporary worker programs
- New second edition provides a current integration of research and intervention on health, safety, and justice of migrant and seasonal farmworkers

Migrant and seasonal farmworkers are largely Latinx men, women, and children. They work in crop, dairy, and livestock production, and are essential to the U.S. agricultural economy—one of the most hazardous and least regulated industries in the United States. Latinx migrant and seasonal farmworkers in the eastern United States experience high rates of illness, injury, and death, indicating widespread occupational injustice. This second edition takes a social justice stance and integrates the past ten years of research and intervention to address health, safety, and justice issues for farmworkers. Contributors cover all major areas of health and safety research for migrant and seasonal farmworkers and their families, explore the factors that affect the health and safety of farmworkers and their families, and suggest approaches for further research and educational and policy intervention needed to improve the health and safety of Latinx farmworkers and their families.
