Place Making in International Practice of Landscape Architecture

A Study of Australian Practices in China

Series: Advanced Topics in Science and Technology in China

- Studies the cognitive approach to the characteristics of place and local knowledge in landscape planning and design practice
- Surveys the exports of landscape architectural services from Australia to China during the period from 1995 to 2007
- Reveals the cognitive approach of international practice to the characteristics of place and local knowledge in the planning and design of Li Lake area in China and the outcomes
- Provides valuable guidance for cross-cultural knowledge exchange of international planning and design services

This book explores international practice in landscape architecture, focusing on the provision of services from Australia to China during China's contemporary urbanization and Australian landscape architects' approaches to place. Landscape architectural practice requires planners and designers to have a deep understanding of local culture, site characteristics, craftsmanship and even project procedures that are often intangible. How to acquire the above local knowledge has become a major challenge for international teams. Through the survey of the practice of Australian landscape practices in China and the case study of Li Lake planning and design project, this book reveals the process and difficulties of landscape planning and design as a transnational practice, as well as its special value as a way of cross-cultural fertilization. This book is intended for students, practitioners and researchers in the fields of landscape architecture, architecture and urban planning.
